

So, this is a very rough idea of what I would like my site to look like. I am a fan of simple layouts so that my work can stand out amongst the elements of my website. I chose the tabs “work, about, contact, and resume” because I think these are four areas that will best represent my experience so far, and highlight what I would like to do with my future. I want my site to be very straight forward, I do not want to nest links within each of these tabs, and I don’t have enough work so far to build on the links I have already provided. Once I have built up more portfolio material I would like to nest links under the “work” tab that can send someone to more detailed views of each of my projects. For instance, right now I am creating flyers for the PW department, I only have one, but once I have more I would like to be able to click on the project under the “work” tab and view all of the flyers I created from that link. I would also like to use the area of my site that says “image” to showcase some of the photos I have taken, I am thinking that I would like to somehow make this a slide show. Then, at the bottom of the page you will see circular links to social media pages of mine that I think are representative of myself.
