

Module 7:

During the usability process my classmates and I primarily discussed the layout and color choice of each of our proofs. When we looked over the skeleton of my site I started the conversation about my background color and how it works with the rest of my design. Each of my two classmates agreed that it somewhat detracts from the seriousness from the rest of the site, but one of them mentioned that the lavender color sort of adds a charm to each page and contributes to my quirky theme. As of right now I do not plan to make changes to the color of my page because I want to see what it looks like when I insert the PDF's and images I plan on including on my site.

Since I was paired with two guys it was interesting to see how drastically different my designs were from each of theirs. Based on what I know about each of my partners, I think their design choices accurately represented each of their personalities. This encouraged me to take other layout options into consideration when reviewing my proofs.
